

Certified Transcript of Rusk Body-Worn-Camera Recording

Recording identifier: ACPD-BWC-214-20250203-195203 Recording officer: Nolan Rusk
Transcript certified: November 14, 2025 Civil exhibit lodged: November 21, 2025

This fictional transcript covers the material portion of Rusk’s camera recording. Times are displayed-camera times reconciled to the certified export. Speaker names identify audible voices when reasonably distinguishable. Descriptions in brackets state only what the image or sound permits; they do not infer hidden hand positions, intent, resistance, or threat.

19:52:14 — Video: Rusk exits a marked vehicle. Building C is ahead under fixed breezeway lighting. Radio traffic identifies the welfare event and repeats “no known weapon.”

19:52:24 — Rusk, to radio: Two-fourteen on scene.

19:52:31 — Video: Vega’s vehicle stops behind Rusk’s. Iris Ellison stands near the parking edge and points upward without approaching.

19:52:38 — Iris: She’s by her door. Please don’t all talk at once.

19:52:43 — Rusk: Stay here for us, okay?

19:52:47 — Video: Rusk reaches the first stair landing. The upper breezeway and apartment doors enter view.

The audio contains footsteps and ordinary radio noise. No threat, report of a weapon, or criminal allegation is heard before first contact.

First contact — 19:52:48 through 19:52:57

19:52:48 — Video: Mara Ellison is seated near the door marked C-12. Both hands are visible and empty. A phone and keys rest on the concrete near the wall.

19:52:49 — Rusk: Mara Ellison?

19:52:51 — Ellison: Yes. Why is everybody here?

19:52:53 — Rusk: Your sister is worried. We're checking that you're safe.

19:52:56 — Ellison: I told her I need space. I'm not going anywhere.

19:52:57 — Video: Rusk stops several feet away. Ellison looks toward him, then toward the open end of the breezeway. Her hands remain visible near her knees.

19:52:58 — Rusk: Are you hurt? Did you take your medication today?

19:53:00 — Ellison: That's between me and my doctor. Please back up.

The exchange is audible without material overlap until its last words. The image shows no weapon, strike, or attempt to run during this segment. It does not establish what Ellison might do later. Vega is audible approaching but is mostly outside Rusk's frame. The fixed rail and a vertical support appear along the frame's right side, features that later affect the field of view when the parties move closer.

Wrist restraint — 19:53:01 through 19:53:07

19:53:01 — Rusk: Stand up slowly and keep your hands where I can see them.

19:53:02 — Video: Ellison shifts. Rusk's left arm extends. His hand closes around Ellison's left wrist. The camera moves forward with him.

19:53:03 — Ellison: Don't grab me.

19:53:04 — Rusk: Hold still. Give me your other hand.

19:53:05 — Video: Ellison's torso turns. The restrained arm moves toward her body. Rusk's sleeve begins covering the lower center of the frame. Her free hand is briefly visible away from the camera-facing edge of Rusk's belt, but the view changes rapidly.

19:53:06 — Ellison: Let go. That hurts.

19:53:07 — Rusk: Stop. Stop pulling.

19:53:07 — Sound: Shoes scrape on concrete. Vega says something beginning with "Mara," partly overlapped and not fully intelligible.

The visible motion establishes that Ellison turned and that the restrained wrist moved. It does not classify the movement as active dangerous resistance or pain-driven recoil. No visible frame in this segment shows Ellison striking Rusk or grasping equipment. The image is beginning to close and cannot be extrapolated beyond what remains visible.

Obstruction begins — 19:53:08 through 19:53:12

19:53:08 — Video: Rusk's sleeve, Ellison's dark coat, and a close view of the support and rail occupy most of the image. Ellison's hands are not reliably visible. This is the beginning of the certified critical obstruction.

19:53:09 — Sound: Fabric movement and two foot contacts. A short portion of overlapping speech is unintelligible.

19:53:10 — Rusk: Give me your hand.

19:53:11 — Rusk: Stop pulling.

19:53:11 — Ellison: You're hurting me.

19:53:12 — Sound: A dull contact sound occurs with continuing fabric noise. Its source and anatomical location cannot be identified from audio. The video remains blocked.

No bracketed notation labels the contact as a blow, a forearm strike, a collision with the rail, or incidental body contact. Rusk later testified that Ellison struck his forearm; Ellison denied it. The recording supplies no visible hand position that resolves their disagreement. Vega's voice is nearer than before, but the transcript cannot infer her view from loudness.

The command to stop pulling confirms Rusk characterized some movement as pulling. Ellison's response confirms she reported pain. Neither statement conclusively supplies direction, purpose, degree, or immediate danger. The transcript preserves those limits rather than selecting an account.

Obstructed contact — 19:53:13 through 19:53:17

19:53:13 — Rusk: Hand behind you. Now.

19:53:14 — Ellison: I can't—your hand—

19:53:14 — Sound: Ellison's statement is cut off by movement noise. The camera shows coat fabric, part of Rusk's arm, and intermittent concrete. Neither hand is identifiable.

19:53:15 — Rusk: Don't. Stay off it.

19:53:15 — Vega: Nolan, I'm coming in.

19:53:16 — Sound: A conducted-energy device begins a continuous electrical cycle. Ellison cries out. Rusk gives a downward direction that overlaps the device sound.

19:53:17 — Video: The image rotates toward the wall and floor. Bodies remain too close to distinguish the contact location or hand placement.

The phrase “stay off it” has no visible referent in the recording. It could reflect Rusk's asserted perception of movement near equipment, but the transcript does not assign that meaning as fact. The device onset is audible and corroborated by its separate activation log. Sound can establish activation timing without showing why Rusk activated it.

No probe discharge is heard or visible. The record elsewhere identifies drive-stun contact. The view does not reveal whether Ellison's preactivation movement posed an immediate threat or consisted only of pulling away from the wrist restraint.

Cycle completion and clearing view — 19:53:18 through 19:53:22

19:53:18 — Sound: The electrical cycle continues. Ellison vocalizes. Rusk repeats a direction to go down. Foot and fabric sounds overlap.

19:53:19 — Video: A narrow portion of concrete and the lower rail appears. Ellison's hands remain outside a reliable view.

19:53:20 — Vega: I have space on this side.

19:53:20 — Rusk: Down. Give us your hands.

19:53:21 — Sound: The continuous energy-device sound ends after approximately five seconds. No second activation follows.

19:53:21 — Ellison: Stop, stop. I'm down.

19:53:22 — Video: The field clears. Ellison is at floor level. Rusk controls one side, and Vega moves toward Ellison's arms. The newly visible frame does not disclose where either hand was seconds earlier.

The certified obstruction ends at 19:53:22. The recording establishes one audible cycle during a physical descent. It does not visibly establish a forearm strike, belt reach, or absence of either act. A cleared aftermath cannot be reverse-projected through fourteen seconds of blocked imagery.

The sound of a cry is consistent with painful energy exposure but does not quantify injury. Medical records separately document superficial contact burns, wrist abrasion, shoulder strain, and no fracture.

Hand control — 19:53:23 through 19:53:37

19:53:23 — Vega: Mara, bring this hand behind you. I'm on your right.

19:53:25 — Ellison: My shoulder. Slow down.

19:53:27 — Rusk: Stop moving and we can finish.

19:53:29 — Video: Vega's hands and part of Ellison's right forearm are visible. Rusk retains control on the opposite side. Ellison's body is down in the breezeway.

19:53:31 — Vega: I have this hand. Easy.

19:53:33 — Sound: A handcuff ratchet is audible. The second wrist is partly blocked by the officers' arms.

19:53:35 — Ellison: It burns. My wrist hurts.

19:53:37 — Rusk: Cuffs are on.

19:53:37 — Video: The parties' positions stabilize. No further energy-device sound occurs. Rusk reaches toward his radio rather than toward the device.

This segment shows the completion of restraint after the critical interval. Movement while the officers position the hands is visible in part, but it does not prove what kind of resistance preceded the cycle. Ellison's pain complaints begin promptly and are later conveyed to medical personnel. The recording contains no statement by Ellison admitting a strike or reach. It also contains no statement by Rusk withdrawing his contemporaneous safety concern.

Post-restraint audio and reporter certification

19:53:42 — Vega: One person is going to talk. Mara, can you breathe okay?

19:53:46 — Ellison: Yes. My shoulder and wrist hurt.

19:53:51 — Rusk, to radio: Subject restrained. Start medical for one drive-stun exposure.

19:54:02 — Ellison: I never tried to take anything. I pulled because you hurt me.

19:54:07 — Rusk: We'll document what happened. Medical is coming.

19:54:15 — Video: Rusk steps back. The phone and keys remain near the apartment door. No weapon is visible or later announced on the recording.

The transcript continues through ordinary medical staging and supervisor notification but contains no additional force. Ellison repeats her denial; Rusk later maintains a contrary account in his report. Neither statement is converted into a certified fact by appearing on audio.

The fictional reporter certifies that this transcript follows the certified November 14 export and preserves the exact 19:53:08–19:53:22 visual obstruction. Unintelligible material is not guessed. Bracketed descriptions were checked against successive frames but do not offer human-factors, police-practice, medical, or legal opinions.

The transcript was lodged in the invented civil action on November 21, 2025. It authenticates no real recording. The associated people, department, property, and event are entirely synthetic.
